On February 1st, 1962, Miss Joanna Weiss, a nurse in Lausanne, Switzerland, was found dead in her apartment. She had been killed with a large knife. The police were called, and they examined the body and the room. They took fingerprints and collected as much evidence as possible. Then they began to look for the murderer. They searched for five months, but they couldn't find him, so they finally gave up looking.

On August 12th, 1963, Heinrich Mann and his wife Elena were watching television in their apartment in Lausanne. Suddenly Elena stood up and walked slowly into the bedroom, as if she were sleepwalking*. She lay down on the bed and stared at the ceiling. Then she began to speak in a very strange voice.

"I am Joanna Weiss," said the voice, "I was killed in my apartment by Helmut Miller. He stole my jewelry and killed me with a knife. Please tell the police."

The voice continued to speak for a few minutes, giving information about the murder. Then Mrs. Mann shook her head, rubbed her eyes and looked around her.

I. 次の英文を読んで下記の問いに答えなさい。

On a winter night in 1829, a young boy of seven was reading a thick history book at his home in Germany. He was very interested in one picture, which showed the ancient Greek city of Troy. The city was in flames, and soldiers were fighting around a huge wooden horse.

“I’d like to go and see Troy,” the boy said to his father.

“That’s impossible,” replied his father, “Troy has completely gone. The Trojan War happened thousands of years ago.”

“But those big walls must still be there,” said the boy, “under the ground somewhere. I want to go and dig them up!”

It seemed just like a childhood dream, but for young Heinrich Schliemann, it was a dream that lasted all his life. When he grew up, he studied business and languages. By the time he was 33, he had mastered 15 languages, including Arabic, Greek and Russian, and he was sent to Moscow as the representative of a trading company. He travelled all over Europe, doing business and making a fortune.

At the age of 46, he was already a millionaire, so he decided to stop working and devote the rest of his life to the search for Troy.
